Timing of assessment behind property value hike

You will likely pay more in property taxes this year because of when the city is required to assess the value of your home.

Numbers released yesterday by the Realtors Association of Edmonton show the average price of all residential property sales in Edmonton and outlying areas in December was down two per cent compared to a year ago.

The city on Tuesday released a median increase in value of a single-family home of nine per cent, based on a July 1, 2010, open market.

The difference in the numbers stems from when they were crunched.

"I don't think the number is wrong, it just depends on when you're taking the snapshot in time," said Larry Westergard, the association's outgoing president. "We saw a high of $390,000 (for a single-family home) at roughly the same time."

After that peak, though, things dropped off.

The average price for a single-family home in December was $355,270 — down $10,000 from November and 2.5 per cent from December 2009.

That makes the 2011 assessment based on the most expensive real estate period of 2010.

Richard Chaney, property assessment adviser with the provincial government, said July 1 allows time for sales analysis to be done.

"There's more involved than just determining what is the ... value of the land," he said, adding July 1 has been a mark as far back as 1995.

Paid LRT parking spots questioned

- Sales plugging along for $42 monthly LRT parking stalls
- Impark operates and oversees lots

Members of city council are questioning the need for paid parking spots at select LRT stations throughout the city.

Tuesday was the first day the pilot project came into effect and as of yesterday, between 55 and 60 per cent were sold.

Pre-sales began Dec. 1, and Coun. Kim Krushell said she thinks the lag in sales shows a lack of interest in the project.

Details

- Century Park and Clareview are nearly sold out while there is less interest for the Stadium and Belvedere stalls.
- The stalls are reserved for park and ride from 6 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays and "I never thought it would be successful because I didn't think there would be that many people to pay for prime parking spots," she said, adding it counters efforts to encourstatutory holidays. During evenings and weekends, parking is free.

- The project is expected to bring in at least $230,000 annually at an 85 per cent sale level, though there were startup costs for signage and public education.

On Tuesday, between 45 and 50 per cent of the stalls were sold. The fact that number jumped in one day signals good things, according to Troy Shewchuk, with the city's transportation department.

Coun. Karen Leibovici said only time will tell if the project will be successful and should be carried into the future.

"We'll have to see whether we're guaranteeing spots in a sense or taking spots away from (others)," she said.

Council approved the pilot project last March, which opened up 18 per cent of the 3,990 stalls at Clareview, Belvedere, Stadium and Century Park LRT stations.

Autism centre reaches out to families

Susanna Becker first suspected her son, Antonio Younathan, had autism spectrum disorder when he was two years old.

"It was kind of hard," she said. "I noticed but was hushing about it."

A doctor's visit six years ago proved her right, and she has been involved with the Centre for Autism Services Alberta since 2007.

Next week, the centre will offer support for the relatives of autistic children with a new Family Night.

"We often hear from the parents that they want contact with other parents who have similar experiences as them," said Jenny McAllister, a psychologist at the centre.

Becker said she believes her 12-year-old daughter, Malina, will better understand her brother because of the initiative, which will have separate groups for siblings and parents.

The deadline to sign up is tomorrow. Sessions will run the second Thursday of the month, starting Jan. 13.

Tree recycling returns next week

It's time to take the ornaments and garland off your Christmas tree and pitch it to the curb — literally.

The City of Edmonton is gearing up for the 20th year of collecting and recycling natural Christmas trees starting Jan. 10.

Residents are asked to place unbagged trees on their sides beside their garbage bags, though the trees will be picked up by a separate truck and not necessarily on regular garbage days.

Connie Boyce, director of community relations for Edmonton's waste management branch, reminds residents that trees must be free of every nail, screw, stand and piece of tinsel.

"Anything left on the tree can cause trouble in the chipper machine," said

YUKIGASSEN

City to host first snowball tourney

From March 4-6 at Fort Edmonton Park, our city will be hosting North America's first ever Yuki-gassen snowball tournament.

Originating in Japan, Yuki-gassen (or Snow Battle) consists of two teams, each bent on capturing the other's flag while dodging attacks and pelt-ing the opposing squad with snowballs.

Anyone can register for the tournament, which is doubling as the Canadian national championship.

Why was Edmonton chosen to host the event?

"Why not? (Snowball fights) are so ingrained in all our childhoods," said Dave Hennessey, director of Yuki-gassen Edmonton, adding the tournament is a way to "spice up an otherwise cold and dull winter."

Belgium to expel priest

► Canadian man wanted for child sex crimes in the Arctic

Belgian officials say they plan to expel a Canadian priest facing sex charges involving Inuit children in Nunavut.

Eric Dejaeger, who was originally Belgian but lost that status when he became a Canadian citizen, remains wanted in Canada on warrants issued in 2002 for sex crimes that are alleged to have happened 30 years ago in Igloolik.

Dejaeger, 63, has been living in Belgium for years — far longer than the legal limit of three months for Canadians without a visa.

Gibbs quits as White House press secretary

A familiar face

► To the world outside of Washington's insular political scene, Robert Gibbs is the rare White House staff member who is considered a familiar face. His sparring with reporters during his press briefings have filled hours of television the last two years.

Robert Gibbs, the White House press secretary and one of the most visible and forceful advocates for President Barack Obama, is quitting his job to become an outside political adviser. The change is among the many expected in the coming days as Obama redefines his leadership team to get ready for a re-election bid and a more powerful opposition Republican Party.

Gibbs said he would be leaving the White House by early February. The top contenders to replace him are two of his deputies, Bill Burton and Josh Earnest, and Jay Carney, who is communications director to Vice-President Joe Biden.

The move allows Gibbs to leave the grinding pace of the press secretary's job, make money giving speeches and spend more time with his family. From the outside, he will still be a key voice in Obama's decision-making, and he will end up back in a pivotal role in Obama's campaign for a second term.

Gas producers look to oil to stay afloat

► Many drillers turning to crude as natural gas prices bottom out ► New markets needed for gas

Canadian natural gas firms are bracing for lean times in 2011, with prices expected to remain weak.

"Producers that are heavily natural gas weighted are having to restructure their business model ... in what looks to be an extended period of low natural gas prices," said Gary Leach, head of the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada.

Producers are chasing after oil instead of natural gas, since oil prices are stronger than natural gas.

"We have an industry that is going in two directions. Some companies are successfully straddling both worlds. And those that have opportunities to increase their crude-oil production are trying to do so," Leach said.

AJM Petroleum Consultants expects Alberta natural gas prices to average $4.10 per 1,000 cubic feet in 2011, and $4.50 in 2012.

Canadian gas has been pushed out of its main market, the United States, because of the high loonie, a supply glut and U.S. economic recovery measures.

Pot growers to pay taxes?

► CRA says income is taxable, whether it's legal or not

Police may turn a blind eye to the sale of unlicensed medical marijuana in British Columbia, but the tax man doesn't.

The Canada Revenue Agency came knocking on the door of the British Columbia Compassion Club last October looking for a list of its pot suppliers.

The club went to federal court asking for a judicial review of the agency demand, arguing that ill medical marijuana users would be the losers when supplies dried up because it had to give up the names.

"If the applicant is seen as a source of information for authorities, it is foreseeable that cultivators will cease to deal with the applicant," say documents filed in federal court.

"The applicant's position is that the CRA should consider the potential 'collateral damage' from its use of civil audit powers."

The Vancouver-based non-profit society supplies medical-grade marijuana to about 6,000 registered members diagnosed with everything from arthritis and glaucoma to cancer and HIV.

Instead of proceeding with the court action, the club has worked out an agreement with the federal tax agency, said John Conroy, lawyer for the Compassion Club.

Now, club organizers are trying to convince 30 or so growers to step forward and declare their income to the CRA during an amnesty worked out with the agency.

While the club puts strict organic farming conditions on growers and bans the use of chemicals, it insists it knows little about the growers themselves.

Taking 3-D television up a notch

LG Electronics says it will sell a new type of 3-D TV this year, one that uses the light, cheap glasses used in 3-D theatres rather than the standard bulky ones used with the 3-D TVs introduced last year. Other TV makers are also expected to announce 3-D sets that work with so-called "passive" glasses.

He says ...

JOHN MAZEROLLE

I'd like to talk about something very close to my heart. Specifically, my lungs.

It's winter, which means most of you have struggled with some symptom of the season, be it the common cold, the common flu, the common fever, the common Guillain-Barré syndrome, the uncommon cold, cabin fever, swine flu, disco fever, Jersey Cold Shore, SAD (Seasonal Affective Disorder) or HAPPY (Heat-Averse Pessimistic Period — Yearly).

I haven't been sick at all, which is good news because it allows me to offer advice to the rest of you, starting with a heartfelt, "Ha ha ha ha HA ha." It's also good news because I generally handle colds about as well as the guy with no face or limbs in that Metallica video.

Because I only want the best for my reader(s), here's my guide to dealing with winter illness.

Q: What is the common cold?

A: It's the cold that commoners get. Royals get a different virus, which is why they always look tired and wave to crowds like they're struggling with a degenerative muscle disease.

Q: What can I do to prevent it?

A: Not much. Studies show that just about every purported cold remedy — zinc, vitamin C, hypospray — either does nothing or is just a Star Trek thing. That's why people hate colds. The best ways to ward off a cold take work — exercise, eat vegetables, drink lots of non-alcoholic drinks — and we think, "Geez, I'd rather get sick."

Q: Is there nothing we can do?

A: It's best to avoid contact of all kinds, including eye contact. And remember not to touch anything that may have been touched by another person. An elevator button, for instance, is a virus-ridden glowing circle with all the killing potential of the Hal 9000. Also, avoid "practical joke" bathrooms that have no-touch flushes, water, soap and paper towels, but require you to pull on a clammy metal handle to get out.

Q: What if human contact is necessary?

A: Fortunately, Health Canada's recommended "sneeze" acts as a warning beacon, cautioning people to stay away by making any coat you are wearing a huge wearable Kleenex with mucous in the elbow folds. But if someone extends their hand, wash it. If someone asks for a hug, run. And never have children.

Q: What are doctors saying?

A: In a recent survey of more than 200 Canadian MD's, most responded hack hack HWAAAGH ah-choo. At least that's what I think they said. It's so hard to read their handwriting.

YOUR GENERATION CAN'T HANDLE THE HARSH LANGUAGE IN HUCKLEBERRY FINN.

Worth mentioning

Solace for world leaders trying to enforce painful austerity measures: At least you're not running Romania. Angry witches are using cat excrement and dead dogs to cast spells on the president and government, who are forcing them to pay taxes. Also in the eye of the taxman are fortune tellers, who should have seen it coming.

And President Traian Basescu isn't laughing it off. In a country where superstition is mainstream, the president and his aides wear purple on Thursdays, allegedly to ward off evil spirits.

A dozen witches will head to the Danube to put a hex on the government today and hurl mandrake into the river "so evil will befall them," said a witch named Alisia. She identified herself with one name, as is customary among witches.

The tax on witches went into effect Saturday as part of the government's drive to crack down on tax evasion in a country that is in recession. Like any self-employed person, they will pay 16 per cent income tax and make contributions to health and pension programs.

Magic in Romania is no laughing matter. Centuries-old superstitions are rife and are tolerated even by the Orthodox Church. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Paltrow's pals help bring her voice out

► Actress turned to Beyoncé and Faith Hill to prepare for role in Country Strong ► Had to win over producers who doubted her

NED

METRO WORLD NEWS IN LOS ANGELES

Famous as she may be, taking on the role of a country music superstar was more than a little daunting for Gwyneth Paltrow. But it wasn't the singing that had her worried — Paltrow has belted out a few tunes on screen previously, after all.

"I was nervous about playing somebody who was such a huge star, which is different from playing someone who, you know, has a guitar and sings or is trying to make it," she says. "My singing teacher in London worked me really hard. She was like, 'There's a big voice in there. We're going to get it out.' And I was scared of my own kind of voice."

Luckily, she had some friends with a little experience in the area. Paltrow turned to singers Beyoncé Knowles and Faith Hill for advice and guidance.

"They were both so supportive of me. They were so generous of spirit," she says. "Beyoncé was in London. She helped me so much. I obsessively watched Beyoncé perform. I just wanted to get a little bit of that incredible self-belief and abandon that she has on stage."

On set, Paltrow found support in Hill, whose husband, Tim McGraw, co-starts in the film. "When I got to Nashville, Faith helped me so much," she says. "Faith said to me, '30 days before you do just start singing it. Sing it every day so you know the vocal part, it's just in your muscle memory.' I just did everything she said, and she got me through it."

As much as she looked to her diva pals, Paltrow did have a music superstar at home to turn to, but she says husband — and Coldplay front-man — Chris Martin wasn't as much help as the ladies.

"I mean, he was great," she says. "But to be totally honest, I kind of picked the brains of my girl singer friends more, because I think it's a very different thing — to be a male in a band as opposed to a lead."

If Paltrow had any doubts about pulling off playing fresh-out-of-rehab singer Kelly Canter, they were nothing compared to those of the studio. At least that's what Screen Gems head Clint Culpepper told her.

"When the script came to him I was already attached, and he's like, 'You all are crazy. She is so wrong for this part,'" Paltrow remembers, adding that Culpepper later changed his tune. "But yeah, I think when you think of country superstar, drug-drink addict, you maybe don't think of me immediately."

Infamous Hollywood hotel inspires Coppola

METRO WORLD NEWS IN LOS ANGELES

Sofia Coppola's latest film, Somewhere, follows fictional movie star Johnny Marco (played by Stephen Dorff) as he drifts drunkenly through life in a rented apartment at the infamous Chateau Marmont hotel on the Sunset Strip.

Given Coppola's Hollywood upbringing, surely

Marco has a real-life counterpart — but she's not naming any names.

"I based him on people I've met and people I know and stories I've heard from the Chateau Marmont — kind of a combination of a bunch of people," Coppola says. "There's maybe a dozen people that I took pieces of. I don't want to get out-of-context and make someone feel bad. So yeah, you can imagine, right?"

One thing she didn't see coming, though, is how many friends have seen it and have assumed they are one of the dozen sources.

"It's funny, the few people that I wasn't really thinking of said, like, 'Oh, it's based on me,'" she says with a laugh. "So many actors have lived at the Chateau."

And some, like John Belushi, have died there. The hotel is steeped in Hollywood history, something Coppola knew she could only capture by shooting in the actual location.

"Luckily they let us film there," she says. "My producer said, 'OK but what's the back-up plan.' I was like, 'I never have a back-up plan.'"

In the film, Marco is suddenly faced with minding his 11-year-old daughter (Elle Fanning) after his ex-wife leaves town unexpectedly.

Designer looks north

► Gorder sources from Canada for interior design series ► Audience wants luxury on small reno budget

Viewers may see some Canadian flair on the American interior design series Dear Genevieve, which kicked off its fourth season Tuesday on HGTV Canada.

The show's famed Manhattan-based decorator, Genevieve Gorder, says she's looked north of the border "a number of times" for items for the show.

"There's a company called Gus in Toronto with modern furniture, a lot of upholstered goods and accessories, that I've used on a couple of episodes where I've done a more contemporary aesthetic," she said.

"When I do go to Canada — my husband's from Canada — I source pretty heavy and bring back what I can because I can get more for the dollar."

Gorder's husband is Calgary-born Tyler Harcott, whom she met a decade ago when she was one of the original decorators on TLC's Trading Spaces and he was hosting the channel's Junkyard Wars.

The network had asked them to participate in show called The Dating Story, but things didn't go quite according to plan.

Each episode of Dear Genevieve begins with Gorder sifting through emails, letters and videos from homeowners distressed over design issues. She then picks one query to respond to and surprises the homeowners with in-person help.

If something goes awry during the makeover, Gorder doesn't mind it making it to air. Her goal is to deliver unscripted, truthful coverage that viewers can relate to.

Three spots to target this year

► The neck is one of the first parts of the body to reveal aging.

► Slather on the moisturizer and SPF to keep your cleavage looking as good as this.

► Save your hands from spots with sunblock.

► The face is an obvious point of focus ► However, it's important to pamper your hands, chest and neck as well ► Here's why

The neck

"The neck ages much more quickly than the face and it's much harder to fix," says Dr. Doris Day, a dermatologist in New York.

an ominous thought. "You want to start paying attention to that area now," she says. She suggests applying a healthy amount of moisturizer, preferably with an SPF. "The good thing is that you can use most of the same products that you use on your face for this part of the body," Day says.

But if your neck is already looking less than radiant, she suggests trying the ColoScience range of SPF powder brushes.

ColoScience,
colorescience.com

The chest

During the autumn/winter runway collections, the cleavage was the star of the show. Keep your headlights bright with moisturizing creams packed with antioxidants and hydrating ingredients such as hyaluronic acid. Like the neck, the chest is another area in which problems can arise quickly. "I see a lot of women who have brown spots on the chest, broken blood vessels and saggy skin in the cleavage area," she says. If the idea of spotty, wrinkly décolletage makes the hair on your arms stand on end, take note: You can decrease your chances of getting skin damage down there with the right products and daily application. Day recommends SkinMedica's TNS Hydrating Complex, which boosts firmness and elasticity.

SkinMedica,

The hands

"Too many people over wash their hands. It's not good because it strips away the natural oils from your skin," Day says. Don't even think about washing without following up with a rich hand cream afterward, according to Day. And don't forget the all-important SPF. "Like your face, your hands are constantly exposed so you want to be sure to protect them from the sun. Even on cloudy days," she says.

A makeup makeover

Don't know where to start on the clean-the-clutter resolution for the new year?

Your cosmetics case would be good since gratification can come in minutes instead of the hours it would take to organize your closet or wade through boxes in the garage.

Linda Wells, editor-in-chief of Allure magazine, is on board. She's going to start with clumpy mascara, foundation that shows signs of separation and any perfume that's cloudy instead of clear. Then out goes the fuchsia lipstick that doesn't look good now nor when she first tried it months ago.

"If something doesn't look good today, yesterday or last year, then it's never going to look good. Give it up," Wells said.

So that you don't end up tossing expensive products because you can't finish them in time, Wells suggested buying smaller jars and bottles, even if it doesn't seem economical at first blush. But you'll pay for wearing a mascara that irritates your eyes because of bacteria, or wasting your time with skin-care products that no longer have active ingredients.

Most products have a use-by date printed on them, or at least give a indicating a product is good for six months or a year, for example, said dermatologist Dr. Neil Sadick, a clinical professor at Weill Medical College of Cornell University. It's efficacy that usually goes first, he said.

There could be a risk in bacteria, especially with direct-contact products such as lipstick and eye makeup, but he said he rarely sees an infection from skin-care products.

Wells noted, however, that performance can be adversely affected from some skin products that actually grow stronger over time, such as the acids in glycolic peels.

The wide-leg trousers, below-the-knee dresses and off-the-shoulder peasant tops headed our way in 2011 mark the beginning of a highly stylized trip down memory lane through the 1970s. Could an avocado kitchen be far behind?

Trend watchers find many sociological parallels between the '70s and the current climate – a time when working women were seen as coming into their own, a period of economic instability and a party-hard attitude. That, they said, could bring back more than a few trends.

Let the glittering glamour shine on

DECOR MOMENT

KARL LOHNES
HOME@
METRONEWS.CA

It's been only days since I took down the holiday ornaments, lights and tree, and I must admit that there's a rather dull vibe around the house. And this cold weather isn't making things any brighter.

Luckily, one of this year's big home decor trends is vintage shimmer and shine from the 1960s. From glossy flooring, sequined pillows and rich satin fabrics, the house can feel like a glamorous holiday throughout all of the 2011.

Here are a few glittering trends to look out for this year.

Restoration Hardware's Aviator Wing Desk adds metallic sparkle to a room.

SHINY FLOORS

The luxe look of silk/wool area rugs add rich colour and sheen to the floor.

Deep colours of charcoal grey and chocolate brown are popular colours right now.

Other colours, such as deep purple, green or pink, could land on our floors soon.

Want ultra-cool flooring? Try leather floors for sheen and texture (check out torlys.com). Made of recycled leather, they add a sense of penthouse sophistication for around $12 per square foot.

Crate and Barrel's Sunburst Mirror mixes gold and silver.

SEQUIN AND BEADS

Although sequins may feel scratchy, no one will argue that their glitter and shine add a sense of party-glamour to a room.

A decorative sequined pillow, beaded lampshade or a drapery panel dotted with a few shiny bobbles will add whimsy and celebration to a room.

You'll find lots of inspiration by shopping in ethnic areas of town. Little India often has sari fabrics — they'll provide all the inspiration you need to get started.

Soft sheen from leather on Crate and Barrel's Delano chair.

SATINY FABRICS

The soft sheen of leather is coming back and this around leather will be in a plethora of colours. Inspired from mostly '60s style, the simple furniture shapes with fashionable coloured leather will help make a statement in the living and family room.

Leather not your style? Consider a traditional styled, button-tufted sofa upholstered in a thick satin fabric. Think Doris Day and her '60s penthouse apartment and you'll be all set for this look. Upholstering a wall in faux-leather or satin gives a luxurious hotel-look to a bedroom.

High-gloss style without the high price from Ikea.

GLOSSY FURNISHINGS

Small spaces take well to super-gloss/shiny surfaces as they help to reflect light and look airier than heavy wood.

Considering a new kitchen? Look no further than the super affordable Ikea Abstrakt cabinetry in your choice of a few eye-popping colours.

Got a heavy-looking coffee table or dresser? Top it with a piece of thick glass to help create a reflective surface and lighten the overall look. A glass-panelled backsplash is an inexpensive and chic way to update a kitchen with shine.

Conversation starters: Art photos add interest to a room

One of the hottest trends in home decor is hanging photographic art, which can make a big impact without costing a lot.

Flip through the pages of any shelter magazine to see examples of arresting imagery, in colour and black and white, of streetscapes, landscapes, portraits and still lifes.

"Photo art brings in elements of energy, atmosphere and emotion," says designer Thom Felicia, one of many designers and retailers who are championing the form.

One place to check out new directions in photo art is artspan.com, a website featuring contemporary artists. Photographer Irene Andreadis of Huntington, N.Y., did a striking series of shots, featured on the site, of an old train car abandoned in the woods. Her lush, colour-saturated shots of flowers also caught the eye of Tiffany's store decorators, who bought several orchid photos.

Kim Curinga, a photographer based in Eight Four, Pa., shot a series of feline portraits, manipulated in Photoshop to look like pop art. The images, also on artspan.com, have a fun modern art vibe.

She's also captured a beautiful group of Yosemite images, evocative of Ansel Adams' work.

"Three of these, five-foot-tall and framed, hang in my home. I print things large — they're more dramatic," she says.

New Yorker Jen Bekman started 20x200.com in 2007. As she sees it, "There are a lot of people out there who want to sell their art and a lot of people who'd like to buy it. They just have a hard time finding each other."

The website name came from the initial concept, which was to offer limited editions of 200 of each art piece, priced at $20.

The site now offers a broader range of sizes and prices.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Getting started

If you're new to photo art, how should you decide what to buy?

- "Start with prints and art books," says Jen Bekman, founder of 20x200.com.
- "It's a great way to figure out what you like. Don't be shy about orienting yourself through something that already interests you: animals, sports, books, nature or even a specific colour."
- Inexpensive photo art posters and some limited editions can also be found on sites like art.com and allposters.com.
- Organized by subject, each site offers work by many famous photographers.
- The New York Times recently invited Jonathan Adler, Kelly Wearstler, Thom Felicia, Laura Kirar and Vicente Wolf to explore the paper's photo archives; their favourites can now be purchased online.

Metro Edmonton's best Lunch Rushes of 2010

Can you guess who the winner was in the search for the city's best meal?

LUNCH RUSH

CHRISTOPHER THRALL
FOOD@METRONEWS.CA

It's never easy to pick the best meal of the year.

I was thrilled to find a few new Indian spots, but how could I choose between the succulent buffets at Narayanni's and Zaika?

Should Famoso or Leva Café get the nod for best mouth-watering thin-crust pizza?

In a year where I devoured the magnificent platter of Barb and Ernie's eggs Benedict or a Big Mo' burger at Twisted Fork, I refuse to pick a winner.

If anyone won, it was me — and you, as you joined me on my travels.

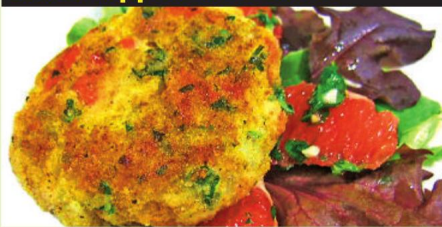

There is fantastic food in Edmonton, so make it your New Year's resolution to find it.

And when you do, email me at edmontonurbanfoodie@gmail.com, and I'll tell the world!

Barb and Ernie's may serve the best eggs Benedict in Edmonton — but best 2010 meal?

May I take your iPad order?

The bar is buzzing on a busy night at Chicago Cut steakhouse as regulars Keith and Peg Bragg scan the wine list.

Soon, they have all bottles under $40 at their fingertips using an iPad supplied by their server.

"You can very quickly look through to see the price per bottle," said Keith, a finance executive, as he scrolled through rows of selections.

Since April, when Apple debuted the tablet, the device is now in use as a full menu at upscale restaurants, hamburger eateries and quick-service chains.

Au Bon Pain uses iPads at six of its 220 locations, with plans to expand. Ed Frechette, the company's vice-president of marketing in Boston, said diners usually fill out pieces of paper with their orders at the cafes, but iPads have simplified the process.

"One of our employees has an iPad with a menu loaded in it and they'll take your order," Frechette said. "You still see a menu board with all the information on it. We have hand-held laminated menus for a reference, but all the paper pads are gone."

At 4Food in New York, where diners can build their own burgers, iPads are at eight kiosks with plans for as many as 30 devices, including Android and BlackBerry platforms. Customers order and enter credit card information into the iPad to pay.

Managing partner Adam Kidron said ordering food electronically will eventually be the norm.

"You've just got to imagine that this is something that won't just be considered to be a discretionary behaviour," Kidron said. "It will be a necessary behaviour."

The tablets are arriving on the travel circuit, too. OTG Management has installed more than 200 iPads loaded with menus at gates in New York's John F. Kennedy International Airport, allowing travellers to order salads and sandwiches while they wait for flights. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Praise for Canadian invasion

The overwhelming presence of Canadian fans at the world junior hockey championship drew praise from local organizers and international officials yesterday.

At a news conference ahead of the event's medal games, International Ice Hockey Federation president Rene Fasel turned to Dave Ogrea, USA Hockey's executive director, and said "I think you can be very happy to have this championship so close to the Canadian border."

Ogrea could only smile in knowing agreement, as an ebullient mass of Canadian fans have papered over HSBC Arena in red throughout the tournament.

"A few more probably did come over the border than we had anticipated or hoped," said Ogrea.

"The enthusiasm of the fans in North America is exceptional and the enthusiasm of the fans in Canada is quite frankly second to none."

How dominant has their presence been?

During Monday's semifinal romp over the host United States, the Canadian fans began chanting, "This is our house!"

Organizers anticipated a total attendance exceeding 330,000, making it the second most attended world junior championship. A record 453,282 took in the 2009 event in Ottawa.

HSBC Arena sold 2.8-million ounces of beer during WJC's first 10 days. Organizers said Canadians bought about two-thirds of the event's tickets.

▶ Team Russia's Artemi Panarin celebrates his goal against Team Canada with teammate Denis Golubev last night.

For the second straight year, Canada has to settle for silver at the world junior hockey championship.

Artemi Panarin scored his second goal of the game at 15:22 of the third period for the winner as Russia roared back to beat Canada 5-3 in the tournament's gold-medal game last night.

Canada looked to have a comfortable three-goal lead heading into the third period, but suffered a disastrous collapse.

RUSSIA	CANADA

Panarin scored 2:33 into the final period, then 11 seconds later, Maxim Kitsyn cut Canada's lead to 3-2.

With Canada reeling, Russian captain Vladimir Tarasenko scored at 7:29 to tie the game 3-3. Panarin then scored the tournament-winning goal.

Nikita Dvurechenski capped the scoring for Russia late in the third.

Canada lost last year's final 6-5 in overtime to the United States in Saskatoon.

Brayden Schenn's goal in the second period gave Canada a 3-0 lead. His 18th point of the tournament moved him into a tie with Dale McCourt (1977) for the most by a Canadian at one world junior championship.

Ryan Ellis and Carter Aston also scored for Canada, which was coming off a convincing 4-1 win over the host Americans in Monday's semifinal.

Russia entered the gold-medal game on a four-game winning streak after opening the tournament with losses to Canada and Sweden.

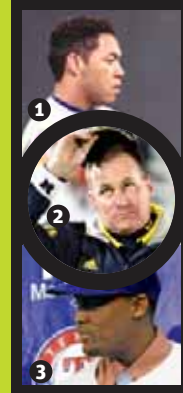

Russia beat the Swedes 4-3 in a shootout in the other semi.

Today's horoscope

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 This is a key time for career issues, so decide what it is you want to accomplish, make plans that will take you from where you are now to where you want to be, then get going.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 You have enough on your plate as it is at the moment, so don't agree to do even more, not even for those you love. You may have more stamina than most signs but you have limits too.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 Someone is trying to make you feel guilty about something that was not your fault — well, not entirely your fault. They will only succeed if you admit responsibility, so deny everything.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 The more time you spend trying to work out what might go wrong the less time you'll have to enjoy all the things that are so obviously going right. Worry

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23 You must make a serious effort today to catch up on the backlog of jobs you never quite got around to finishing, but should have.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24-Sept. 22 You may be eager to experience new things, thanks to the Sun and Mars in the most dynamic area of your chart, but in some areas it might be wiser to play safe today. On the work front, especially, don't go to extremes.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 Let friends and family members know what it is you desire because the planets indicate you might get lucky today.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 Are you totally committed to whatever it is you are working on? If not the results could be disappointing, both for you and for those who support you ♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 It's great that you are so enthusiastic but energy, like everything else, is a commodity that has a finite supply, so don't overdo it.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20

You cannot possibly be on good terms with everyone and there is no need to blame yourself if you fall out with a work colleague or business associate today.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Someone you trust will offer you advice today and you would be wise to listen, even if it is not what you want to hear. That applies to all areas but in particular to the world of ideas.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 Get tough with someone who is giving you a hard time. You may be a nice guy by nature but you don't have to put up with this sort of nonsense.
